Online dating has enjoyed a huge upsurge in popularity over the past ten years. Today it is cited as the third most popular way in the UK for singles to meet new people, behind introductions through friends and family and meeting someone in a bar or club. Those singles who are still apprehensive will usually come up with one of the following several excuses.

- 1) "I would rather meet someone in real life". This may well be true, but online dating is designed as a process whereby members can meet other people and get to know them a little bit before meeting in real life, not instead of.
- 2) "I don't want anyone to know I date online". The stigma of online dating has all but vanished in the past decade. Approximately one in five couples now meet each other online. Also, those couples who do meet online generally have a far shorter courtship before marriage - 18 months as opposed to 42 months.
