When you're working in Photoshop, your image is organized in layers, which enables you to undo, redo, and update the image multiple times without altering the original. This tutorial walks you through the basics of using layers as well as creating and importing layers from other Photoshop images. Getting Familiar with Photoshop Layers Photoshop layers enable you to create an invisible layer that you can add to and change as you work. After you create or import an image in Photoshop, the image lives in layers. The layers are not visible by default, but are activated when you choose an image editing task. Any time you edit or create an image, you use layers to keep track of all your edits. You start off with a blank layer in the Layers palette. As you make each edit, you place it in the layer until you're done. At that point, you'll delete or move the layers so you can be more productive by not having to go back and undo layers. By default, layers are not visible, but you can see them and see the name of the current layer in the Layers palette (as shown in Figure 3-1). One of the keys to using Photoshop effectively is to get to know and understand all the options available in the Layers palette. Creating a new layer Any time you make an edit, you insert a new layer into your image. Here are the basic steps to creating a new layer: 1. Choose Layer⇒New from the menu or choose Layer⇒New from the Layers Palette to display the New Layer dialog box shown in Figure 3-2, where you can name the layer and choose the type of layer (Solid Color, Gradient, Pattern, or even an image from a different Photoshop document). This dialog box is very similar to the dialog boxes used to create new layers in most image editors. The Layer Style options become available when you choose Pattern, and the Web Options choices become available when you choose an image. 2. Choose the type of layer you want to create from the New Layer dialog box. • To create a regular or solid color layer, click Solid Color. • To create a gradient layer, click Gradient; you can create a linear gradient or a radial gradient here. Radial gradients are often used for creating water reflections or making shapes look like they're cut out of a background. • Click Pattern for a pattern layer or

Jared Kushner, President Trump's son-in-law, had a private conversation with a Russian banker prior to the start of his presidential campaign, Kushner testified before Congress. Kushner, who is leading Trump's foreign policy, told Congress that he met Sergey Gorkov, a Russian banker with links to Russian intelligence, at the Prince Alain de Monaco International Monaco Yacht Show, which was sponsored by the Russian government and took place in April 2016. Gorkov is the Russian president's representative in the United States, and head of Vnesheconombank (VEB), the Russian government-owned bank that "pledged support to Mr. Trump's presidential campaign" according to an Office of the Director of National Intelligence report that was released in January. Kushner said the conversation with Gorkov was in the presence of Sergey Kislyak, the Russian ambassador. "I remember the ambassador being there but not the context of that conversation," Kushner said. "But I do recall Mr. Gorkov expressing strong interest in setting up a direct channel of communication between the Russian government and the Trump transition team." Kushner also said that he has had "no private conversations" with Kislyak during the campaign. Kislyak has been a regular feature on Trump's foreign policy team, advising the president on the ongoing investigation into Russian interference in the 2016 election. While Kushner's testimony was not surprising, given his position and the sensitive information shared during the discussion, the importance of the date in the story, April 10, 2016, was. Russia went on to handcraft its own sanctions on U.S. individuals and entities, two months before the election. Trump campaign officials at the time were not aware that the exchange took place. The initial idea for the Kushner-Gorkov exchange came from mutual acquaintances at the real estate firm, Kushner testified. "These were mostly retired people ... who had a better understanding of the real estate industry and politics in the U.S. than I did at that time," he said. Kushner also recounted that Kislyak was one of three Russian officials he asked for the State Department's permission to visit the country. He wanted to know if the incoming administration would support Russia's lifting of sanctions imposed on Russia by the Obama administration, according to the Wall Street Journal.

System Requirements:

The default setting is to require a graphics card that supports DirectX11 and OpenGL 4.0. This would be an Intel HD 3000, Radeon HD 5000 or GeForce 6/700 series. If you want to play on a machine without a suitable graphics card, click on "Turn off" under the "Maintenance" tab, and disable "DirectX 11/OpenGL". This would allow your machine to be playable on lower hardware. If you want to play on a Mac, disable "DirectX" in the "Maintenance" tab to allow Linux to play
